PREFACE

The aim of the compiler of the present volume is to supply his clerical brethren and students in ecclesiastical seminaries with a handy lexicon explanatory of the terms used in the liturgical books of the Catholic Church. Many words that occur in these books are not to be found in classical dictionaries, or not with the meanings attached to them in the liturgical books.

The books to which this volume will serve as a companion are the Vulgate (the Latin Bible), the Roman Missal, Breviary, Martyrology, Ritual, Pontifical and Ceremonial of Bishops; also several compendiums of Sacred Liturgy. Unusual terms, or well-known words with different meanings from those found in Latin dictionaries, have been selected from these books and an effort has been made to furnish an English equivalent where possible.

Words not otherwise indicated are nouns, or words used as such; and of these the genitive termination and gender are given; also sometimes the language from which they are derived (Greek, Hebrew, Syriac). Adjectives and adverbs are qualified as such by the abbreviations adj. and adv. The Arabic numeral after the infinitive form of the verb indicates its conjugation. The other parts of speech are not considered.

Since many place-names and names of persons occur in the Bible, Missal, and Breviary, these, too, have been entered; also the names of the Saints who have a special feast, and of those solemnly canonized by the Apostolic See since the tenth century; also all the existing residential episcopal sees, with special reference to those of North and South America.

In the references the following abbreviations are used: B.R., the Roman Breviary; M.R., the Roman Martyrology; R.R., the Roman Ritual; P.R., the Roman Pontifical; C.E., the Cæremoniale Episcoporum. Biblical references require no explanation. The Roman Curia in issuing rescripts to bishops designates the dioceses by an adjectival form of its name, unless the diocese bear the name of a Saint; thus, Novarcensis, for Newark: in this lexicon will be found these adjectives as well as the Latin and modern names of the sees. In biographical data d. means died: in diocesan data f. stands for founded, or erected. Other abbreviations, such as mus. for music, and obs. for obsolete, &c, are familiar.

The compiler is aware that smoe terms may have been overlooked and that some definitions or translations will not meet with approval from all sides. He will be thankful for advice on any points, as this is a new venture—at least in this country—and he wishes to make the book as complete and useful as possible. His object is to help his brethren and seminarians to arrive at a fuller understanding of the liturgical books, especially the Missal and the Breviary, in order that a better understanding will result in a deeper appreciation of the value and dignity of sacred ministrations and functions.
